New Screen Magazine,

No. 16. + One Rec. C.

THE old inhabitants of the Tennessee mountains don't take much stock in new-fangled thirty dollar fishing rods. To their way of thinking, a young sapling will catch just as many fish, if you know how, and the Screen Magazine this week will show you how it's done. Two hundred thousand years ago strange monsters roamed the earth. Some of these have just been unearthed in the asphalt pits of Rancho la Brea, California. Who knows what two hundred thousand more years may bring to light! It's a far cry from the first commercial telephone to the modern switchboard serving 10,000 subscribers, but then, great oaks grow from little chestnuts. Screen Magazine No. 16 gives you some of the very latest uses for the little German helmet that you have in your home, one of them being feeding a blind horse from it. Be sure it's a blind horse, because one who could see might kick. Then we are shown some of the quiet spots in New York: Times Square and the Curb Market, for example, but then, as Abe Martin remarks: "It's th' element o' chance that makes th' cantelope so pop'lar."
